Horrid Henry's holiday

Horrid Henry hated holidays.

Henry's idea of a super holiday was sitting on a sofa eating crisps and watching TV.

Unfortunately, his parents usually had other plans.

Once they took him to see some castles. But there were no castles.

There were only piles of stones and broken walls.

"Never again," said Henry.

The next year he had to go to a lot of museums.

"Never again," said Mum and Dad.

Last year they went to the seaside.

"The sun is too hot," Henry whined.

"The water is too cold," Henry whined.

"The food is too yucky," Henry grumbled.

"The bed is lumpy," Henry moaned.

The great day arrived at last. Horrid Henry, Perfect Peter, Mum and Dad boarded the ferry for France.

Henry and Peter had never been on a boat before.

Henry jumped on and off the seats.

Peter did a lovely drawing.

The boat went up and down and up and down. Henry ran back and forth between the aisles.

Peter pasted stickers in his notebook.

The boat went up and down and up and down.

Henry sat on a revolving chair and spun around.

Peter played with his puppets.

The boat went up and down and up and down.

Then Henry and Peter ate a big greasy lunch of sausages and chips in the café.

The boat went up and down, up and down, and up and down.

Henry began to feel queasy.

Peter began to feel queasy.

Henry's face went green.

Peter's face went green.

"I think I'm going to be sick," said Henry, and threw up all over Mum.

"I think I'm going to be - ," said Peter, and threw up all over Dad.

"Oh no," said Mum.

"Never mind," said Dad. "I just know this will be our best holiday ever."

Finally, the boat arrived in France.

After driving and driving and driving they reached the campsite.

It was even better than Henry's dreams. The tents were as big as houses. Henry heard the happy sound of TVs blaring, music playing, and children splashing and shrieking. The sun shone. The sky was blue.

"Wow, this looks great," said Henry.

But the car drove on.

"Stop!" said Henry. "You've gone too far."

"We're not staying in that awful place," said Dad.

They drove on.

"Here's our campsite," said Dad. "A real campsite!"

Henry stared at the bare rocky ground under the cloudy grey sky. There were three small tents flapping in the wind. There was a single tap. There were a few trees. There was nothing else.

"It's wonderful!" said Mum.

"It's wonderful!" said Peter.

"But where is the TV?" said Henry.

"No TV here, thank goodness," said Mum. "We've got books."

"But where are the beds?" said Henry.

"No beds here, thank goodness," said Dad. "We've got sleeping bags."

"Buy where's the pool?" said Henry.

"No pool," said Dad. "We'll swim in the river."

"Where's the toilet?" said Peter.

Dad pointed at a distant cubicle. Three people stood waiting.

"All the way over there?" said Peter. "I'm not complaining," he added quickly.

Mum and Dad unpacked the car. Henry stood and scowled.

"Who wants to help put up the tent?" asked Mum.

"I do!" said Dad.

"I do!" said Peter.

Henry was horrified. "We have to put up our own tent?"

"Of course," said Mum.

"I don't like it here," said Henry.

"I want to go camping in the other place."

"That's not camping," said Dad. "Those tents have beds in them. And showers. And fridges. And cookers, and TVs. Horrible."

Dad shuddered.

"Horrible," said Peter.

"And we have such a lovely snug tent here," said Mum.

"Nothing modern – just wooden pegs and poles."

“Well, I want to stay there,” said Henry.

“We’re staying here,” said Dad.

“NO!” screamed Henry.

“YES!” screamed Dad.

I am sorry to say that Henry then had the longest, loudest, noisiest, shrillest, most horrible tantrum you can imagine.

Did you think that a horrid boy like Henry would like nothing better than sleeping on hard rocky ground in a soggy sleeping bag without a pillow?

You thought wrong.

Henry liked comfy beds.

Henry liked crisp sheets.

Henry liked hot baths.

Henry liked micro waved dinners, TV and noise.

He did not like cold showers, fresh air and quiet.
